

ABSTRACT

A spark plug includes a partially cylindrical insulator element, including a bore hole and a central electrode located in an opening in the base part of the insulator element. The insulator element and the central electrode are connected by at least one metallic soldered connection and/or one metallic welded connection and/or one friction-locked connection aligned in the radial direction.